THE CHECK WAS BAD.

G. W. Stamper's Name Forged to a Promise to Pay.

On Friday iast a man representing himself as J. D. Arthur swooped down on Mayaville with a check on the Deposit Bank at Vanceburg, cailing for $805 good dollars and purporting to be smerchaat of hat city.

He first bought a wagon and things from Colonel John I Winter, offering the check in payment; but as Mr. Winter was from Missonri, be didn't shell out the difference in cash.

Then he bought a gold watch from the Messrs. McCarthey, shoving out boo and then some in change, but Mr. McCarthey was also from Missonri. A third trial was made at Kilipp & Brown's, where he wanted a set of harness and some $350 in change.

At one or more of these places he offered a couple of good citizens in the identification; but unfortunately they were out of town.

The next trial was made at the State national Bank, where the Cashier required some one to vouch for him.

It didn't take him more than a part of the check with the name of J. D. Arthur and promoded to say that he didn't need all the money it called for; $200 would satisfy his present wants, and he would leave the balance on deposit, asking for a few half this was a very plausible proceeding, and so natural that it would disarm the slightest assiption.

But a little later in the course of the Bank's business along came another check with G. W. Stamper's name hanging to the Southeast corner, and a comparison of the signatures showed a leasify difference.

The real J. D. Arthur was later brought down from its home at Concord; and he proved to be not the man who figured in the transaction.
